Arbor day is our countrys tree-planting holiday.

It is a day when men, woman, and children make our towns and citys better places to live.

The holiday's history goes back to the 1870s and to a Part of the country that is now Nebraska. Nebraska was known as the Nebraska Territory then. It had not become a state yet. People had moved there from other areas. The settlers old surroundings had been full of trees, but the new home of these recent arrivals were built on grasslands that had very few trees.

A Nebraska newspaper editor named Julius Sterling Morton often wrote about the importance of Trees. He encouraged people to plant as many as possible and to participate in a new holiday called Arbor Day.

Mortons' idea was a success. The first Arbor Day took place on april 10, 1872. Since then, every state has chosen its own date to celebrate this holidays. Why are the fifty states' official dates different? The time is based on a wide variety of weather conditions. After all, maine's best tree-planting time isn't the same as Mississippis.
